Stock Market jumps 488 points Wednesday

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial average soared to its second-biggest point gain ever Wednesday as investors — who had been running from stocks as if the sky were falling — flooded back in to buy after weeks of nearly relentless selling. The 30-share Dow, the world's most widely watched stock average, jumped 488.95 to 8,191.29, its second-biggest point gain and its biggest percentage increase since shortly after the October 1987 crash. The Dow, down nearly 170 points earlier in the session, has fallen in each of the last nine weeks.

BAGRAM AIR BASE, Afghanistan — A team from the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine-Europe recently released the results of the comprehensive environmental survey completed a few weeks ago at Bagram Air Base.

"The survey took place from June 25 through July 4 and they looked at several areas," said Army Col. Roger King, Combined Joint Task Force-180 Public Affairs officer. "The team took samples of air, soil, and water to determine if any environmental or occupation hazards were present."

CHPPM established monitoring stations across Bagram Air Base to test for radiation, air quality, water quality, asbestos and lead.

McNeill, Ishmael Kahn meet in Herat

By Staff Sgt.
Rhonda M. Lawson

Combined Joint Task Force-180 Commander Lt. Gen. Dan McNeill met with one of the most powerful figures in Afghanistan when he visited Herat City Wednesday.

During the visit, Ishmael Kahn, governor of Herat Province, stressed the importance of Coalition support in helping to rebuild Afghanistan.

"Afghanistan has been through a difficult war for the last 23 years," Kahn said. "We need help. Afghan people are dying because of a lack of water. Afghanistan needs all the help we can get."

Building schools was also a high priority.

"The first time I ever met Ishmael Kahn, he told me one of the most important things was to see that the children get educated," McNeill said.

The 489th Civil Affairs team, out of Knoxville, Tenn., has been working to do just that. To date, the Herat team has helped rebuild about 15 schools with the help of a number of non-governmental agencies, including the local Afghan Transition Initiative.

"We've handed off nine schools to ATI already," said Sgt. Rodney Cox, a Civil Affairs specialist with the 489th.

The team has also donated a number of generators, as well as helped with irrigation and well projects. Additionally, the team also helped Shelter for Life with work on the Moslec Refugee Camp, the largest refugee camp in the world, according to Cox.

"At one time, there

See McNEILL, Page A3

Tests for alpha, beta and gamma radiation were also conducted and aside from a small radioactive component being discovered and removed from an old abandoned aircraft, CHPPM determined radiation was not a hazard here.

The base's water supply, which is purified using a reverse osmosis water purification unit, was found to meet all standards set forth by the Environmental Protection Agency for safe drinking water.

Several buildings on base contained asbestos and lead based building materials. These materials only become a health hazard if they crumble and their fibers or particles become airborne. Air samples for asbestos and lead came back negative and CHPPM determined that these materials were not a health hazards as well.

It should come as no surprise to base residents that CHPPM found the dust levels here to be a moderate health hazard. The survey results stated that the combination of a very dry environment, wind, unpaved roads, frequent construction and vehicular activity stirs up dust almost constantly.

The survey did not find any other increased levels of heavy metals, pesticides or volatile organic compounds in the dust or soil samples.

House of Commons, warned there would also be closer scrutiny of alleged breaches to the cease-fires. His statement comes against a backdrop of sectarian violence in Northern Ireland which has led Catholics and Protestants to allege each side is breaking the cease-fire agreements.

Israelis wrestle with attack outcome

JERUSALEM — As Israel coped with internal debate and international criticism a day after it killed a top Hamas commander and 14 others in Gaza, Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Wednesday he does not support "the results of the attack," which killed nine children. As he did immediately following the attack, Peres expressed regret that the attack on Salah Shehade killed civilians, especially the children. Shehade's bodyguard, Zaher Nassar, was also killed.

Study: Living together may lead to breakups

ATLANTA — Couples in the United States who live together before marrying may be more likely to consider divorce than those who do not, according to a study released Wednesday by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's health statistics division. The report on marriage, divorce, remarriage and cohabitation said 75 percent of American women have been married by age 30 and about half have lived with their partner outside of marriage.

were 400,000 refugees in this camp," Cox said.

"(Kahn) thinks there are a lot of refugees coming in and they're going to be disenchanted because there are not a lot of opportunities," McNeill said. "So he is looking for help to get the economy kickstarted."

"The only way to bring stability in Afghanistan is to create jobs and build the country again," Kahn said. "All of our friends promised to help Afghanistan, but a promise is not going to change Afghanistan's situation."

However, the Afghans aren't the only people feeling an economic crunch. Cox said the projects they and the area NGOs are working on are in danger of coming to a halt if more money isn't brought to the area.

"We only have three projects that we have not put to bed yet," he said. "The funding has really started to dry up not only with us, but with some of the international organizations."

Help may be on the way, according to McNeill.

"There has been a crunch on money, but I'm told it's contained in the supplemental," he said. "I believe if Congress hasn't passed the supplement, they're close to passing it."

One project the 489th is currently involved in is a school in the Injeel District, which was in such disrepair that it had to be rebuilt from scratch. The 18-room schoolhouse now has playground equipment, trees, a water tank and a three-meter wall around the entire school. The school is set for completion in the next two weeks.

"We used all of the people in the village as unskilled labor, so that puts the money back in their pocket," Cox said. "We did the whole project for $47,000. It will be the largest school in the Injeel District."

Herat, which lies about 70 miles from the Iranian border, is one of the most modern cities in the country, besides Kabul, according to Cox. He added that the locals have even begun building their own homes with private funding outside of what Civil

Affairs and the NGOs are doing.

"That, to us, is a really good indicator that the people are starting to feel a lot more comfortable about the future and what is to come for this region," he said. "That gives us a lot of hope that when we leave it's not going to fall apart."

Kahn explained that Herat is different from many of the other provinces in Afghanistan because there aren't as many warlords in the area.

"All of the Herat people are under one leadership," he said. "There's never going to be a fight between different provinces, or different people, or different ethnic groups."

"This area has been very stable," Cox said. "There's a lack of ethnic tensions here that you see elsewhere in the country, there's less armed soldiers on the streets, and there's a presence of us and the British. That helps stabilize the region and makes it a more permissible environment for the NGO community to do their job and for us to do our job."

Kahn also expressed his gratitude to McNeill for visiting.

"The general is a very famous, very intelligent person," he said. "We are very proud that he came to visit us."

Aviophobia in Afghanistan

Bottom line

Flying.

The word alone frightens me.

Flying. Oooh, see the hair on my arm stand up!

I can't remember when this phobia started, but it has gotten to the point of sheer embarrassment.

A week ago, I had to swallow my irrational fear like a piece of bubble gum because I was tasked to soar in the sky.

It was a simple flight – one hour to be precise.

Nonetheless, dread filled me up like water filling up a bottle. I could have been flying (ooh) from one building to another – as long as my feet are not touching the ground, my arm hair ends up looking like a dense forest.

When I arrived at the airfield, my battle buddy noticed how nervous I was so she decided to make small talk.

Didn't listen to a single word. I was too busy imagining tomorrow's headlines in the Freedom Watch — Plane Crashes; No Survivors.

The moment of truth had arrived. Along with several others, my battle buddy and I were ushered into the C-130 with the equivalent swagger of a death march. I wondered if any of the others felt the same way as I did.

Probably not. I was the only passenger who forgot to buckle up.

I tried to calm myself down with thoughts of sports: Remembering the night Michael Jordan nailed the bucket to give his team the lead as Byron Russell looked on; the night the Atlanta Braves beat Cleveland for its first major title; the day Tiger Woods won his first Masters tournament by 13 strokes; the morning Steffi Graf rallied to win Wimbledon against Jana Novotna; the night the Atlanta Falcons lost the Super Bowl to the Denver Broncos.

I looked to my left. An officer said hello. To my right. My battle buddy was getting comfy to go to sleep. In front of me

Bass may go to space

N'Sync's Lance Bass "has signed a preliminary contract" and "is officially a candidate" for a Russian mission to the International Space Station this October, a spokesman for Russia's Rosaviakosmos told Reuters from Moscow on Tuesday. It has not yet been decided whether the 23-year-old will actually fly. America's National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which partners with the Russians on the space station project, late last week expressed concerns despite his lifelong dreams of becoming an astronaut, Bass may lack the proper education, endurance and fluency in Russian to undertake such a journey. RASA (as the Russian space agency is known) revealed, however, that it could use the money that backers of Bass's trip would be prepared to pay.

Marines win weekend tourney at K2

By Spc. Alfredo Jimenez Jr.

28th Public Affairs Detachment

BAGRAM AIR

BASE, Afghanistan —

Before the tournament tipped off, the Army squad was bunched up together, talking about how it was going to be an undemanding evening. On the other side of the court, the Marine team, oblivious to the severe heat conditions surrounding the blacktop, showed signs of intense hustle.

To fully understand these teams' direct hatred for one another, one must recollect a few weeks ago, during the Fourth of July celebrations, when another tournament was held. No question about it. The 65th Military Police Company Enforcers, from Fort Bragg, N.C., were simply the best team then. No opponent stood a chance against the bigger, stronger and athletic service members. Even the Marines acknowledged that much.

But that was then and this was now.

No way the Enforcers were going to take it to the Marine Air Control Squadron Deuces, from Cherry Point, N.C., again. No way the Deuces were going down like that, not in front of a capacity crowd.

However, the odds, going into the four-team weekend tournament, were against the Deuces. For starters, the Marine team consisted of only seven players. The defending champions had 20.

Secondly, and most importantly, the Marines had to deal with the fans. About 80 percent of the crowd was yelling for the Army to kick the Deuces' carcasses.

It didn't happen.

The Deuces, led by unheralded point guard Terry Alexander, rallied from a first-half five-point deficit to upset the Enforcers 19-17 in the first round of the tournament held July 20 at Karshi-Khanabad, Uzbekistan.

"We just ran out of time chasing after the ball out of bounds," said Enforcers head coach Khalid Mustafaa. "In the second half, they capitalized on our mistakes."

"They underestimated us," Alexander said. "They played like an Army of One, while we played as a team."

The Deuces were not finished yet.

Behind Alexander's spectacular first half (four points, three assists, three rebounds) and Russell Britton's game-

J6 wins, MPs eat dust at Bagram's weekend bowl

Participants in Sunday's Dust Bowl learn the source of the competition's name the hard way as they attempt to avoid inhaling much of the airborne soil.

BAGRAM AIR BASE, Afghanistan — The sidelines, concertina wire on one side and GP mediums on the other. The goals, a tent corner at one end and a port-a-potty at the other. About the only thing legitimate about this football game is the ball.

The teams are as odd a pair as the field they play on. Those who keep our e-mail access fast and running — the J6, and those who check our bags for secrets and bombs — the 21st Military Police Company was a big pile of mail, all wrapped up in a yellow bag. Three piles, I think — I couldn't see because the rear hatch closed, the red lights came on and my flight took off.

It wasn't even five minutes into the flight that I felt the plane shake.

I went for my right pocket. Pictures of my wife and daughter were there. I went for my left pocket. A copy of the Daily Bread was there. I couldn't recall if I had read today's or not. What a time to forget!

One thing I didn't forget was how many movie stars, Rock-and-Roll celebrities and sporting legends have been lost in plane crashes.

Otis Redding and John Denver, Valens and Holly, Patsy Cline and Aaliyah.

Rocky Marciano never lost a bout. He did against the plane. Roberto Clemente was delivering humanitarian aid until he was stopped in midair. Even the greatest soldier in America's history — Audie Murphy — was lost to a crash.

I looked back to my right. She was sleeping like a baby. The officer to my left got up from his seat and walked around. The pile of mail stood still.

Several minutes later, it was announced that the runway was a few miles away.

The landing wasn't perfect. You could have told by the way I held on.

When we were getting off the plane, I was so excited I wanted to hug everyone on board. I wanted to speak with the pilots. They declined.

I was going to ask if they considered themselves somewhat valiant for flying (ooh) all of us back in one piece. Their response probably would have sounded something like this:

"Naw, it's our duty. It's our job."

I would have to disagree. Because not only did they fly us home safely, but they also made sure thousands of soldiers received their mail.

Oh yeah by the way, I was also able to finish this column.

(Airborne), 16th MP Brigade. These Fort Bragg soldiers brought a little bit of American culture with them to Afghanistan.

Sunday afternoon was windy enough to blow the shells off at least three tents; something that has not happened since the tents were erected over two months ago. One would think the game would be called off due to the stinging clouds of dust that burn the eyes and clog the lungs.

"It wasn't bad if you compare it to a Texas tornado," said Ryan Davidson, 18th Airborne Corps.

In true military fashion the teams chose to ignore the weather and simply drive on.

After waiting an hour for enough MP's to show up to make a team, the rules were quickly settled upon.

"We don't call it touch, we call it tag" said Michael Maice, 35th Signal Brigade. "It sounds less sensitive."

Sensitivities are to be left off the field. Considering, one wrong move and you could end up in the concertina wire, as Maice once did, sustaining minor holes.

"That stuff is no joke," he remarked as he wiped drops of blood from his bicep.

Not everyone saw the wire as an obstacle.

"The concertina was the best defense," said Thomas H. Courchaine, 21st MP Co., "because, on offense you never knew if you were gonna just miss it or fall into it."

Other obstacles are the six-inch deep mud holes around the field, which a few of the players stumbled into once or twice.

"As a team we adapted to the conditions of the field and gave a good challenge," said Richard Wilson, 21st MP Co.

Players for the J6 scouted around for a new field prior to the game but found none suitable, Maice said.

"Besides a better field would not give us the home field advantage," he said and boasts, "every one is afraid to go to Concertina Field."

Maice and others from the J6 often practice on the field, which is near their tent in Dragon City.

"It's sort of like a field expedient football field," said George Castles, 35th Sig. Bde. "If (the field) wasn't like that, it wouldn't be like playing in Afghanistan."

The MP's were good sports about the conditions. They did not complain when the ball went over the wire into the street or when it rolled away into forbidden camps. They just hollered along with the J6 until some passerby returned it.

"As long as the PX was open there was always someone to throw the football back," said Courchaine.

Tactical avoidance of concertina, tents and concrete barriers are not the point of the game only additives. The ultimate goal is to win of course.

As with any sports, a game that isn't rained out or called off due to uncontrollable circumstances there is always a loser, a team that just doesn't make it.

This week the Dust Bowls bragging rights go to the communication men. That's right; the computer nerds beat the brawn of the military police. However, by how much the J6 won is still disputed, some say the score was 10-9, some say it was 10-8.

"I really want to make every one understand that just because we work on computers does not mean we don't play sports," said Castles.

He also said he would like to see more sections come out to participate in organized sports in order to build team cohesion.

"Because exercise is essential in an environment like this, in order to relieve stress, clearing the mind and working as a team is essential to the mission," Castles said.

Others on the J6 team have a more basic concept of what is important.

"It's all about bragging rights," said Edward Mayfield. "It's a serious morale booster around here to win. Morale is one thing the teams have in common."

"This is good for soldiers," Wilson said, "it gives us something to do besides running, push ups and sit ups."

Castles said with a little practice they might be a much harder team to beat next time.

As far as the opposition is concerned all was not lost.

"We were very motivated we played hard as a team and we would love to play again," Wilson said.

Durham traded to Athletics for minor-leaguer

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Second baseman Ray Durham, the subject of recent trade rumors, was finally dealt by the Chicago White Sox on Thursday to the Oakland Athletics for Triple-A pitcher Jon Adkins.

The trade, completed after the White Sox agreed to send cash to pay part of Durham's salary, was announced following Oakland's 5-4 loss to the Anaheim Angels.

Durham, an All-Star in 1998 and 2000, will join the Athletics in Texas for Friday night's game. The A's are in the middle of the AL West and wild card races while Chicago is way behind in the AL Central.

"He's a talent, this kid," Oakland manager Art Howe said. "It's nice to inject that kind of bat into our lineup. He's a switch-hitter with speed, he's got a lot of tools."

Durham, 30, was hitting .299 with nine homers and 48 RBI. He also stole 20 bases and scored 71 runs.

Atlanta, Los Angeles and Boston were also said to have been interested in Durham, who's in the final season of a four-year contract extension. Baseball's deadline for making trades without waivers is July 31.

Martinez beats Devil Rays

BOSTON — Pedro Martinez improved to 9-1 after Red Sox losses and he's not happy about it.

"I don't really want to pitch after losses. I want to pitch after wins," he said after Boston's 6-0 win over Tampa Bay on Thursday night that extended his dominating streak to a 4-0 record and 0.79 ERA in his last five starts.

Boston lost the previous two games of the series against the worst team in the majors, so Martinez had to deliver in a familiar role — getting the Red Sox back on the winning track.

ending heroics (six points, five rebounds and one assist), the Deuces annihilated the weary-laden Morale, Welfare and Recreation Hot Boys 23-13 for the championship.

"We were motivated for this tournament because the Army was talking trash all week," Britton said.

"They are a good team," said Solomon Simmons, who played for the Hot Boys and is with the 35th Signal Company from Fort Bragg. "But we were tired after we beat the Air Force in our first-round match up, while they rested up. We will get them next time."

The Marine Deuces are content on winning the tournament title and blemishing the Army's pristine record. But are equally excited about something else too.

They are scheduled to go back home in two weeks.

"No one will beat us again," Britton said. "We will leave as champions."
